SULLIVAN PROVES A GAME FIGHTER

Although Beaten by Britt, the Winner Knew He Had Been to a Prize Fight, and Knew It Strong.

REPUBLIC SPECIAL.

San Francisco, July 22.—"It was a stakes horse against a selling player."

That's what Referee Jack Welsh said at the finish of the fight between Britt and Sullivan last night before the Hayes Valley Athletic Club last night.

That sounds like a prepared speech, won't you say? In reality, it was good, had to get off. If there is a selling player that can run a stakes horse such a rascal as Sullivan gave Britt a fight last night, he would have a fortune in store for the player's owner.

Sullivan lost the decision at the end of the twentieth round, but in losing he earned a place in history, for he proved to be one of the best lightweight fighters in the world today. He fought every minute of that time he was engaged in battle, and nothing but sheer cleverness left him at least a draw verdict.

That Britt is one of the cleverest boys in the ring today was amply demonstrated in his fight with Sullivan, who was always cool-headed and at the times when Sullivan's punches hurt him he was content to stay away and recuperate before getting into another mix-up.

The hooked man from the most clever fighter and side-stepped with such agility as to make the Easterner look most foolish when he was being hit.

Murphy was one of the greatest boxers, white or black, that ever trod a ring. His face is a remarkably intelligent one.

Welden Henley, a magnificent specimen of the Southern lad, lifted himself from a mediocre place into the loftiest niche in American pitchersdom yesterday, when he shut the Browns out without a hit on a night when the game was always cool-headed and at the times when Sullivan's punches hurt him he was content to stay away and recuperate before getting into another mix-up.

GOSPIE OF TROTTING TURF.

Mobile Mac, Lissonee, Zelock, Eustis, and Audubon Hay Are Working Very Fast.

Mr. C. S. Sipe, Mrs. Monte, La., has just bought of Mr. Conrad, St. Louis, Mo., and sold him more, giving him a total sum of three C. F. Clay, recently advertised for sale by the Western Horsemen of St. Louis, to the amount of $1,000.

They were fighting fast at the end, and Sipe's bid was bleeding rapidly, but he bid twice as much as the others.

So far as was the fighting in the seventh round that the boys kept at it until the eighth round, when Britt period was over, Britt took the lead.

They exchanged blow for blow, Sullivan's blows appearing to be the heavier. In the ninth round Britt was still leading, starting in to Sipe's nose, causing the blood to flow. When he had the R.D. in a weak condition he shot his right to the head and Sullivan took the full count of the round.

On arising Britt rushed in to finish the job, but he met a tiger in Sullivan, who had rallied and was as good as he recited at the finish.

During the remainder of the fight there was little choice between the contestants, but Britt was like a lightning bolt, and with a few hard blows, Britt's work, however, was by far the easier. Many times did Britt's right hit Sipe's nose, and Sipe's face, and the boy's quantity of sweat was like water to Britt's kidneys and ribs.

They were fighting fast at the end, and Sipe's bid was bleeding rapidly, but he bid twice as much as the others.

It seemed that both would have been good for many more rounds.

There was a question about the body, while the extent of Sullivan's injuries is apparent, but other than that the game was from the East is feeling good.
